This is none too early when the soil can be worked to plant the hardies such as poppy, sweet William, peas, Larkspur, foxglove, pinks, B. buttons and others that must get their start in cool weather. In our big 10 ct. seed package the early planting mixture is separated from the general mixture, also the vines. We sell no blooms so our best seed goes in to these mixed flower seed packages of more then 30 sorts. A proper proportion of each. These are friendly flowers easy to grow, old and new favorites and plenty of all. Send a dime save a dollar.

We make up a mixture of perennial plants 16 for 25cts. seasonal changes. Nothing included you order separate.

Grannie's Granny

By JAMES A. SLOTE

Sell thet ole spinnin wheel? la, suz! I mind,
When I was young and peert and ole Granny kind
Put baton in hand and said learn to turn
For thet is the fust you-all must learn.

Carded wool on the spindle next she put;
Then, one two three up and three two one

Back— I was barefoot
La, suz, how I learned to make thet wheel hum
'Specially when Zeke a courtin would come.

I allow 40 knots she could make in a day,
And the old reel click twict, I heerd Zeke say
At saying nice things Granny sed Zeke was sick.
But he's no flash in the pan ner a fly up the crick

His 40 was good his ox team the best,
And soon, when alone, I was spinnin a dress,
For Zeke and me courted and Zeke an me wed.
Thet wheel spun his clothes until he were dead

Will I sell thet ole wheel?—O! I see now you joke
I 'lowed thet you ment it when fust you spoke.
It spun my baby's fust dress—O! thet happy day
Spun one for myself, in sweet yarbs laid away.

A R E V E R I E

By JAMES A. SLOTE

The wild flowers bloom and the pine trees grow,
The fish lurk deep in the streams swift flow,
Near an old log cottage where in dreams I go.
An old worn stepstone and a puncheon floor,
The spinning wheel harnessed inside the door,
There my forebears dwelt in the days of yore.
The big fireplace at the end of the room.
Standing nearby is grannies o'd loom.
Kept dast-free with a sedgegrass broom.
Over the mantle is the long squirrel gun,
The weight clock starts its strike with a hum,
Granny's reel sounds a click and a skein is run.
A dinner pot hangs on the old swing crane,
The iron teakettle sings its low refrain,
In the fire a boy sees his castle in Spain
When the whippoorwill called in the woods below,
To a little maidens home with posies I'd go,
And we built air castles in the moonlight glow.
I still hear the music of my hound-dogs bay,
The Bob-White is calling in the same sweet way,
O was it many years ago or only yesterday.
I long to go back but the house is no more,
The old couple's home is on the other shore,
My castle in Spain— a room in the city's roar
But the flowers still bloom and the trees still grow,
And the fish lurk deep in the streams swift flow,
I have traveled far and my steps are slow,
But back there, once again, I hope to go.

PHANTASY

By JAMES A. SLOTE

This Sabbath day I sought the shade
In the city of the dead,
The leaves were whispering secrets,
A bee drowsed overhead.
O was it true or did I dream,
As the shadows oe'r me crept,
I saw lost friends appearing there
As with the dead I slept.
Mounds were gone but in their place
Departed friends stood there,
With joy and gladness on their face,
No lines of grief or care.
From far away came others too,
I knew them all by name,
Some had led the simple life
And some had come to fame.
John and Will and Joe were there,
And Bess and You and I.
Soon all were leaving one by one
And you waved me goodbye.
I started up, the mounds were back
And I was there alone,
In this hallowed spirit meeting place
Of those who had gone home.
I'll grieve not for departed friends,
Their soul has taken wing
To join their happy loved ones there,
Yes death where is thy sting?

POLITICAL BLANK VERSE

By JAMES A. SLOTE

I cast my vote for better times in 1928 ,before the year had rolled around the factory closed its gate.

They promised to keep wages up,
As we all remember ,
They kept their promise too, you bet
O yes, they did—like

I voted then for the New Deal in 1932
Our money's gone wer'e on relief,
And the system is a stew. It was spend
Your coin, then save your coin, buy
;Baby bonds; as

I'll vote the ticket again this fall,
You bet I will — like

With money growing scarcer since
1923, tax eaters draw the same old
Pay, and railroads hold their rate,
More tax free bonds to make more
Loans, the money kings hoard to ,
Yes I'll vote the ticket again this fall,
You know I will —like

I will crash the gate at the polls this
Fall ,jam through the crowd pell
To vote for the shrewdest liars again .
O! gee 'aint politics ?

NUMBERED HOURS

By JAMES A. SLOTE

Six hundred and thirty thousand—then
Seven hundred and twenty more
Hours are yours at three score and ten,
With perchance a few extra in store,

Your clock is busy tolling them off,
These hours of your life as they go,
While we are young at Time we scoff,
But the pendulum swings to and fro.

A register this of Father Time,
Counts the hours both night and day
For old and others in their prime
And the careless child at play.

In the busy day or the quiet night,
Counting the strokes it gave.
The thought comes with a touch of fright,
We are one hour nearer the grave.

The hours are his—he takes them, too,
Pleadings are so much chaff;
For time began when the world was new,
Destroying all things in his path.

O, let him ring up our span of hours,
As a miser counts his gold
We'll journey then to a land of flowers,
To a "land where we never grow old".

DECORATION DAY

By JAMES A. SLOTE

Beside these mounds where our loved ones sleep,
We gather each year, a custom to keep.
A wreath of flowers, a prayer and some tears—
As our thoughts drift back to bygone years

Under these mounds, loved parents sleep,
A brother a sister, for these too we weep.
For the husband the wife and the children we pray,
As we cover their graves with flowers today.

Beside these mounds, we reverently tread
Speaking softly of those nearby dead.
Those under these mounds once met with us here,
Will a mound cover me or a loved one next year?

We will cover their graves with flowers today,
Then take up our journey on life's weary way
The great and the humble today we have found
The end of our journey is marked by a mound

HOMeward BOUND

By JAMES A. SLOTE

Pray' old man why hurry so fast?

Please pause awhile on your way,

Tell us of scenes through which you passed,
And some events of a bygone day.

Your burthen, old man was heavy with care,
It bowed your back and your knees,

It sapped your strength and white'ed your hair,
And left scars that God alone sees.

O where are your loved ones now old man,
Have you left them along the way?

You soon will join them its the Creators plan,
You have no wish longer to stay.

There's a valley and river to cross old man,
When you reach the foot of the hill,

But have no fear, there it's peaceful and calm,
Obeying the Great Masters will.

Hasten on old man to the end of your road,
There's a dear one your eyes alone see,

A loved one who willingly shared every load,
Is waiting there lonely for thee.

TRIPLE ENTENDRE

Arranged.

By JAMES A. SLOTE

If you are for the service read straight through, if opposed read everyother line
then read the second, fourth line etc.

Hark! hear the lobby sound,
The tax payers wild alarm,
By air and wire the country round,
Should call us all to arm;
Who for farm up-lifters stand,
Honor and fame are theirs;
Their ruin is at hand,
Who opposition dares.
Their laws all have a scent,
To me a great delight,
I hate their cursed portent
Where they resist a mite.
Farm helpers of today,
They are my daily toast,
They all should sneak away,
Who now the service roast.
Where none resist their hold,
They have my heart and hand,
They should for slaves be sold,
Who dare resist this band.
On these men and ladies cute,
May daily blessings pour,
Confusion and dispute ,
On their knockers evermore.

THE OLD CHAIR

By JAMES A. SLOTE

Her favorite rose still peeps within
The little room she kept so bright,
Where many curious old time things
Seem waiting in that softened light.
Among those many old time things
With spreading arms reposeful air,
Upon a braided round rag rug,
There sits a grandmother's easy chair
O, it was once a chair of state
Where joys and sorrows oft' were told
There erring children learned their fate
---A kiss upon their hair of gold.
"Twas here the happy lovers came,
Their rosy future to unfold,
And for comfort came again
When babe was laid away—so cold.
Full many a Bible verse was read
By candle light in that old arm chair,
Full many a loved one now is dead
She rocked to sleep with loving care.
She too has gently passed away,
And in some quiet churchyard sleeps;
The chair sits there expectantly,
The while its lonely vigil keeps.

This collection not for sale.

O could these relics find a tongue,
To tell of owners long since passed,
They'd tell of couples brave and young
Who, a lot with pioneers was cast.

They'd tell how time upon their brow,
Put silver locks, as years passed by
How Children came, and went, and how.
They saw them old and feeble die.

They show the craftsman's cunning hand,
These relics once to someone dear,

Though long since in that promised land,
Their spirits still seem hovering near.
